4 Things to Do with Inherited Jewelry

Just received your Grandmother's pendant as a gift or inheritance? Troubled by the emotional significance of this keepsake, but probably won't wear it as it's not to your taste?

Here are 4 Things you can do...

1. Sell it outright to an interested party
2. Donate it to a charity
3. Send it to an auction sale
4. Re-design it and enjoy the memories

In each of the above actions, there is a critical piece of information that can help with the decision. It is the value of the item. Emotional value is determined by the recipient, but monetary value is information that requires expertise and knowledge.

Jewelry Judge Ben Gordon helps with information to base decisions upon. Call 713 492 – 1432 or click consultation to reserve 15 minutes of free consultation time to determine your best action.

Why a Free Consultation?

A free consultation points you in the right direction.

For those who wish to sell estate jewelry, you'll learn what market price you might expect and even locate a potential buyer for your item. If considering a donation, learn what paperwork you'll need to document its value. For those selling at auction, find out which auction houses to consider and what to expect. And for those who wish to create a new design or refresh the look of a vintage piece, Mr. Gordon can advise on resources. Grandmothers would approve!
